Rochelle Sperber Rochelle Sperber, a former foreign service officer, teaches English and creative writing. Spinoza Spinoza's Theory of Human Motivation An Examination of the Link Between Monetary Reward and Behavioral Change Spinoza's Theory of Human Motivation explores the work of Baruch Spinoza, the seventeenth-century philosopher and scientist. In this book, Jacques Dubois, Professor and Chair of the Department of Philosophy and Religion at Ohio Dominican University, carefully analyzes how the biblical parable of the wheat and the tares relates to Spinoza's theory of human motivation. In so doing, Spinoza's Theory of Human Motivation offers a distinctive look at the Old Testament parable and reads Spinoza's intricate metaphysics. The impact of Spinoza's thought on the world, particularly in political philosophy and economics, is astonishing. Dubois examines the place of the parable in the canon, disentangles the complexities of the parable's symbolic interpretation, traces the intellectual and emotional origin of the parable in the Old Testament, and situates Spinoza's thought in the context of his time. Harrison and Sue Harrison and Sue, a contemporary American married couple with their daughter, Tracy, become aware of their precarious financial situation through Sue's mother. When she passes away, the couple's finances are so depleted that they are forced to sell their home and rely on their daughter's income to pay the bills. Harrison and Sue realize they are not prepared to live on their own and have to enter the marriage market once again. Their marriage is restored and they attempt to live up to their responsibilities as good parents, but their instability threatens Tracy's security, as she learns about the financial problems they are experiencing. Harrison and Sue struggle to balance the needs of a growing family with those of a busy career. David and Elizabeth David and Elizabeth are a Mormon couple who struggle with infertility, accompanied by crippling financial debt. In this work, David and Elizabeth talk about their journey as they explain how they became embroiled in the world of assisted reproductive technology (ART).
